Learning outcomes	The course develops the following generic competencies: a) instrumental competencies: cognitive abilities; understanding and dealing with ideas and concepts; ability of analysis and synthesis b) interpersonal competencies: ability of critical argumentation; ability of criticism and self-criticism; social interaction and cooperation with others; acknowledgment of differences and multiculturalism c) systematic competencies: individual work; ability to compare different approaches and knowledge structures, critical thinking; development of an interdisciplinary approach Course-specific competencies: analysis and critical thinking concerning basic patterns discernible from the relationships between social and linguistic structures; ability to compare different approaches and interpretations of the interdependence of social aspects of language communities and characteristics of their linguistic behavior. By the end of the course students will be able to: -define and interpret basic sociolinguistic concepts -analyze the relationships between different linguistic structures (phonological, morphological and syntactic) and the social dimension of language -interpret the importance of extralinguistic context in the analysis of language use -analyze similarities and differences between specific theoretical frameworks and methodological approaches used to interpret sociolinguistic phenomena
Enrolment prerequisites	Enrolment in the 6 th semester of the undergraduate study of the English language and literature
Course subject	Sociolinguistics is an interdisciplinary science that views language in social context and attempts to explain the complexity of the relationships between language, culture and society. Students are acquainted with basic sociolinguistic phenomena through readings of literature relevant for a particular area of research. Students identify, interpret and analyze the phenomena on the basis of selected readings. The phenomena include:  - standard language, dialect, variety, vernacular, idiolect  - development of methodological approaches in the analysis of language variation (Fischer, Labov, Trudgill, Wolfram, Milroy)  - social stratification of language (social mobility and language variation, Bernstein and codes, AAVE)  - pidgin and creole languages (status, geographical distribution, linguistic features, theories of origin)  - languages in contact, bilingualism and multilingualism, diglossia, codeswitching, code-mixing  - relationship between language and culture (Sapir-Whorf hypothesis, kinship terminology, euphemisms and taboo)  - language and gender  - language policy and language planning (language standardization, language death)

	Students develop critical thinking towards basic sociolinguistic areas of research and towards methods used to conduct such research. Furthermore, students are acquainted with traditional and contemporary theoretical frameworks within which such phenomena are analyzed.

Assignments of the final grade	Students prepare and present their seminar presentation in pairs. Seminar presentations are determined beforehand with the course instructor. Students who pass both the mid-term and the end-term exam do not have to take the final written exam if they are satisfied with the results obtained on the mid-term and the final-term exams. Their final grade represents a combination of the results of mid-term, end-term exam and seminar presentation (mid-term exam – 40%, end-term exam – 40%, seminar presentation – 20%). Students who do not pass both the mid-term and the end-term exam have to take the final written exam. Their grade represents the combination of the results of the final exam (80%) and the seminar presentation (20%).
