

Vesna Ukić Košta is Assistant Professor in Literature in the English department, University of Zadar, Croatia. She was awarded her MA from the University of Zagreb with a thesis on women's experience in the poetry of contemporary Irish poet Eavan Boland, and her PhD from the University of Zadar with a dissertation on Catholicism in novels of twentieth-century Irish women authors. Her research centers on twentieth-century British and Irish literature (especially modernist poetry), contemporary British literature, cultural studies and popular culture (especially the intersections between the canon and popular culture in the British context).

She has published mainly on twentieth-century Irish women writers, and is currently co-editing two collections of essays, one on William Shakespeare and the other one on literary and linguistic perspectives of migration processes. In the English department at the University of Zadar, she is teaching courses in British and Irish poetry, Irish women's writing and Anglophone cultures.
