ABOUT US:

The Department of Croatian Studies is one of the central departments of the University of Zadar, established in 1956 as one of the six departments on which the renowned Faculty of Philosophy in Zadar was based. Since the Department of Croatian Studies, called the Chair of Croatian Language at the time, has always been a bearer of the studies of national interest, it has taken different names due to the change in the socio-political situation. When the University of Zadar was established in 2003, the Department of Croatian Language and Literature together with the Department of Russian Language and Literature merged in the joint Department of Croatian and Slavic Studies. Since October 1, 2018, the Department of Croatian Studies has acted as an independent university department.

The Croatian Department of Croatian and Slavic Studies is conducting a university undergraduate and graduate course of study of the Croatian language and literature (teaching course), i.e. the study of national language and literature. After completing the undergraduate course of study, students are awarded with the title of the first-leveleer in Croatian Language and Literature (bacaleurate), and with a title of Master of Profession in Croatian Language and Literature at the end of the graduate course (mag. educ. philol. croat.). On completing the study, the student is qualified for the teaching job in primary and secondary schools, for editorial work on the radio and television, in scientific and professional journals, in diplomacy, in the media and in tourism.

In Zadar's Croatian and Slavic Studies, the study is carried out according to the Bologna system. The comparable university study of Croatian language and literature (as one-subject or two-subject) is carried out at the following Croatian higher education institutions: Faculty of Philosophy, University of Zagreb, Faculty of Philosophy, University of Rijeka, Faculty of Philosophy, Josip Juraj Strossmayer, Osijek, Faculty of Philosophy, University of Split and Faculty of Philosophy Juraj Dobrila in Pula.

The enrollment quota for students in the first year of the undergraduate study of Croatian Language and Literature is fifty-five students (fifty Croatian citizens through the system of State Matura plus five foreign nationals). More than two hundred students attend the study of Croatian language and literature at the undergraduate and graduate level.

The Student Literary Association "Ludens" has been set up, in which the students of Philological Studies of the University of Zadar gather and collaborate in joint projects (student conferences, literary evenings, guest and home performances).

A total of twenty-four teachers are employed in the Department of Croatian Studies, thirteen of whom are in scientific-teaching positions (three tenured full professors, two full professors, three associate professors, five assistant professors), four postgraduate students or senior assistants, as well as seven assistants, one language instructor and four outside associates.

The Department of Croatian and Slavic Studies has a developed network of mobility and international cooperation (Italy, Austria, Germany, Hungary, Slovakia, Czech Republic, Poland, etc.).

The International Summer School of Croatian Language and Culture "Zoranićeva Arkadija" (Zoranić's Arcadia) has been active in the Department since 2008.

In cooperation with the Department of Russian Studies, the Department publishes a scientific journal entitled "Croatica et Slavica Iadertina", and within the same co-operation organises a biennial international scientific conference "The Zadar Philological Days".
