ABOUT US:

The Department of German is one of the twenty-nine departments at the University of Zadar. The Department offers the following undergraduate (Bachelor's Degree) and graduate (Master's Degree) programmes: Undergraduate Programme in German Language and Literature (double major), Graduate Programme in German Language and Literature, Teacher's Education (double major), Graduate Programme in German Language and Literature, Translation Studies (double major).

There are 13 employees and two foreign contract lecturers instructing approximately 240 students on annual basis.

The department provides students with a solid training in all aspects of German language and literature and an understanding of the cultures expressed in this language. Through varied courses, students have the chance to explore the theoretical, historical and applied linguistics. They can also receive an indepth training in all areas of German literature. These courses provide students with a knowledge of German language, literature and civilization and with an understanding of present-day civilization and culture in German-speaking countries.

Our graduate students are socialized into the teaching profession through different opportunities to develop teaching expertise, including glottodidactics, classrooms visits and classroom-based research and mentored teaching opportunities.

In the academic year 2012/13 we started performing a graduate programme in translation (double major). The programme gives access to a range of professions, such as translation, court interpreting, the media, administration and tourism.

The department regularly organizes conferences, symposia and workshops for both students and educators. All faculty regularly participate at international scientific conferences and they publish the results of their research in scientific publications, including the journal GEM published by the Department.

In the University Library, the students of German language and literature dispose of a quality selection of primary literature. Our students and faculty can also take advantage of the Austrian library „Dr. Alois Mock” which has an excellent and up to date collection of titles from the field of linguistic and literary science, textbooks, monographs, AV materials and reference collection.

The department encourages and facilitates student mobility. The well-established program of student’s mobility (ERASMUS) provides study abroad opportunities in Germany and Austria, as well as in other countries, at the universities that have established bilateral exchange agreements with the University of Zadar.

The Department of German Studies is one of the network partners of the TRANS network. The full name of the TRANS network is TRANSkulturelle Kommunikation und TRANSLation. The network which focuses on translation studies provides students with the opportunities to travel and study at the Central-European partner universities of the CEEPUS network.

Our students also have the opportunity to compete every year for a two-week, three-week or semester long scholarships, provided by German and Austrian cultural institutions and spend a certain period of time in the countries whose culture, language and literature they study.
