ABOUT US:

Students have the possibility to enrol two undergraduate study programmes at the Department of Classical Philology (Latin Language and Roman Literature or Greek Language and Literature) and two graduate study programmes with the same names. It is recommendable to study the Latin and Greek language at the same time since the two study programmes complement each other. The programmes can also be studied individually. It is recommendable to study them in combination with history, art history, archaeology and philosophy, but they can be combined with any other double-major study programme as well.

Teaching starts from the basic levels. For enrolment it is sufficient to complete any four-year high school.

Although we would like to have more work space, and the University strives and struggles to provide it, our present locality is at a lovely place, on the third floor of the facility near the sea with a view on the islands of Zadar, near the Roman Forum, the church of St. Donat's, the Archaeological Museum... We have our own library with the essential literature for the study which we constantly enrich with new titles. The majority of the primary literature, such as grammars and dictionaries, are available in digital form.
