ABOUT US:

Department of History is one of the oldest departments of Zadar University. Founded in 1956, it was one of the first departments of the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences in Zadar and the only higher education institution in Croatia along with the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences in Zagreb, where future historians have been educated for many years. This tradition has been continued by the University of Zadar founded in 2002.

The study of history is being conducted at the undergraduate and graduate level as a single major or double major. Double major study can be combined with other programs at the University. A three-year undergraduate study is organized chronologically and geographically from prehistory to modern times, while the two-year graduate study is organized by a number of electoral courses that provide students broader specialization opportunities. By completing the undergraduate study the students acquire the title Bachelor's Degree in History, and after finishing graduate program Master's Degree in History. Department of History has a long tradition in organising and conducting postgraduate studies. Nowadays, in collaboration with the Department of Geography, an interdisciplinary graduate study Adriatic - link among the continents is being conducted. The Department annually publishes the journal Miscellanea Hadriatica et Mediterranea. Scientific interest of the journal and Department focuses on topics related to Adriatic and side Adriatic history and its interaction primarily with the Mediterranean and the rest of the world as well.

University library, Research library as well as National Archives in Zadar are available to history students for their adequate work and development. History students are actively participating in the work of Department. Every year a two-day event Days of History is being organised, where students and professors hold popular lectures on specific historical topics. Within that, the journal of history students Rostra is being published regularly.

Department of History disposes adequate financial and human resources in order to conduct high-quality higher education programs. The Department's staff consists of 16 employees, 12 of which are in the research-teaching status and 4 in the associate status. The teaching also is participated by 2 exterior associates. Department's staff is involved in the research projects realisation funded by the Ministry of Science and Education.
