Description of the course	What is identity? How are identities constructed? How do different identities relate to one another? This course investigates these questions through a discussion of ethnicity, class, race, gender, and sexuality, in comparative perspective. We begin with theoretical approaches to identity (structuralism, phenomenology), and continue by applying these approaches to identity formation around the globe. This includes emerging middle classes in Africa, migrant identities in Germany, European integrations, construction of masculinity in Bali, and small-scale fisheries in Uruguay. The main objective of the course is to enable students to critically reflect on various theoretical concepts of identity and politics of identification. The course will cover basic concepts, issues and controversies of identity theory and the ways in which they are articulated in contemporary social sciences.
Learning outcomes of the course	On the basis of the acquired knowledge, students will: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • critically apply different theoretical notions of identity in the analysis of the complex processes of contemporaneity, • analyse and compare various theoretical concepts of identity within specific areas (social, cultural, geopolitical, virtual), • apply acquired knowledge and scientific skills in interdisciplinary research on identity issues.
