1.1. Academic Program Administrative Team

Academic Director and Chair of Center for Inter-American Studies

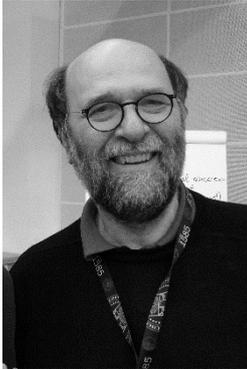

Roberta Maierhofer is Professor of American Studies and Director of the Center for Inter-American Studies (C.IAS) at the University of Graz, Austria. From 1999 to 2011, she held a series of Vice-Rector positions for International Relations (1999-2003), International Relations and Affirmative Action for Women (2003-2007), and International Relations and Interdisciplinary Cooperation (2007-2011). In 2000, she initiated and established the focus area South-Eastern Europe at the University of Graz. This expertise of regional and interregional collaboration was fundamental for her leadership role at the Center for Inter-American Studies, which she has been directing since February 2006, and determined how the University of Graz established a second regional focus area in terms of North-, Central- and South America in 2012. Her research focuses on American Literature and Cultural Studies, Gender Studies, Transatlantic Cooperation in Education, and Age/Aging Studies. She also acts as a co-advisor in terms of the Joint Degree in English and American Studies. Since 2004, she has been directing the Graz International Summer School Seggau, which was established as an interdisciplinary and intercultural platform in the fields of European and Inter-American Studies.

Academic Co-Director of GUSEGG

Barbara Ratzenböck studied sociology at the University of Graz and at Hendrix College, Arkansas. She is a postdoc researcher at the Center for Inter-American Studies of the University of Graz. Her recent completed Phd project with the title “Media relations: how and why older women care for information and communication technologies” (2020), as well as her teaching focus on sociology of aging, media & technology studies, cultural studies, and Inter-American studies. Currently, she is serving as Austrian dataset coordinator of the ACT Cross-National Longitudinal Study: Older Audiences in the Digital Media Environment of the international Ageing + Communication + Technologies Project (actproject.ca). Serving as academic co-director of the Graz International Summer School Seggau (GUSEGG) and founding member of the student-led platform Evidence & Imagination (EVI) at the Doctoral Academy of the University of Graz, she supports intercultural exchange among international students and researchers.

Co-Director and Representative of COMECE

Michael Kuhn is a theologian and permanent deacon. He studied theology and film/ communication sciences in Vienna, Amsterdam and Utrecht. He is a Senior Policy Adviser on EU affairs of the Austrian Bishops' Conference and Deputy General Secretary of COMECE. His publications focus on film and theology, religion, theology and European public affairs. Michael Kuhn is the representative for the COMECE at GUSEGG and a steering committee member. He offers the meditation sessions in the mornings of both weeks of the summer school, and for the three days of last year's Research Hub as well.

Representative of the Diocese Graz-Seckau

Florian Traussnig is consultant for education and culture of the Catholic University Chaplaincy in Graz (KHG), and chief editor of its magazine Denken+Glauben. He is also an independent researcher in the field of contemporary military history and propaganda studies. Having received his doctorate in history from the University of Graz in 2013, he has published two books on the "Resistance from the Outside" against Hitler Germany by Austrian exiles between 1938 and 1945. His book "Die Psychokrieger aus Camp Sharpe. Österreicher als Kampfpropagandisten der US-Armee im Zweiten Weltkrieg" came out in August 2021.

GUSEGG Coordinator

Dagmar Wallenstorfer is a PhD candidate at the University of Graz, Austria, and currently working as the project coordinator for the Graz International Summer School Seggau. From 2016-2018 she worked as a high school teacher for English and Biology in Austria, after that she worked as a German language instructor for adults. Her research focuses on the effects of cultural diversity in classroom settings, the relation between culture and identity, and the question of how teachers can support students by becoming culturally aware members of society.

2. General Description

GUSEGG 2021: July 4 – 10, 2021

The Graz International Summer School Seggau is an interdisciplinary and international program that offers a rich academic curriculum, an intercultural space for learning, the opportunity for academic and professional development, and the opportunity to reach a diverse cohort of students for a hybrid summer school experience by adding a different format to the already existing wide range of other programs. It is designed as an educational immersive experience that offers learning both on an academic as well as a personal level, and provides students with the opportunity of meeting like-minded people from more than thirty countries. The program is run by the University of Graz, which is Austria's second largest comprehensive university in Austria.

The program is designed for internationally oriented, highly motivated students, who wish to deepen their understanding of current European affairs with a focus on Europe and America. It offers students multiple opportunities to study and discuss global developments and challenges within the context of transformation processes and demographic changes that affect aspects of individual, social, political, religious, cultural, literary, regional, economic, cohort and national identities.

2.1. Course Credits and Teaching Format

The Graz International Summer School Seggau 2021 is made up of morning research labs, where due to its hybrid form and the different times zones, only the students present at Seggau Castle and the ones who share the same time zone will have to attend; the afternoon seminars in hybrid form, which will have to be attended by all participants, the ones on site and the ones online; and the evening lectures, which will also be attended by all participants, both online and on site. In addition to the one-week program of GUSEGG 2021: Castle in the Cloud/s, the GUSEGG Academy invites GUSEGG students, alumni and interested participants to further join the discourse on issues and topics in the context of the GUSEGG 2021 topics. Students who wish to receive the 6 ECTS, are required to participate in 5 events of the GUSEGG Academy, which take place throughout the year, from April 2021 to December 2021, and to hand in a critical review on each of them, in addition to the active participation in all formats of the summer school and a seminar paper that will be handed in after the completion of the program.

2.2. Cost of Program and On-Site Support

The total student participation cost for students from the University of Graz is 250 € covering course costs, tuition, room & board (single rooms, and 3 meals per day). Participation cost for international students participating remotely via online platforms is 10€. On-site, the academic and administrative program coordinators will be available 24/7. All the participants will be given an emergency telephone number for the whole duration of the program.

2.3. Aims and Objectives

Apart from developing and strengthening academic collaboration, the program strives to:

- Develop critical thinking of students and build intercultural dialogue,
- Ensure quality education with a variety of research labs and seminars, including many international participants, lecturers, and other experts in their fields,
- Encourage students to work together in small interdisciplinary team settings to complete certain tasks and to seek additional support from all the professors on site,
- Provide equal opportunities for students in presenting their work (e.g. presenting a scholarly poster, participating in a science slam, publishing in the GUSEGG publication, etc.),
- Establish sustainable interdisciplinary cooperation of teachers, students, and participating experts by creating an international community through the GUSEGG Alumni-network:
<https://alumni.uni-graz.at/de/alumni-gruppen/chapter/chapter-international-summer-school-seggau/>
- Present and discuss focus areas of the University of Graz – South Eastern Europe and North, Central and South America – through interdisciplinary lectures.

2.3.1. Outcomes:

- Developing critical thinking of students,
- Discussing change in today's world, from migrations, political regimes, climate change to new technologies,
- Enabling students to gain an understanding of current global affairs and to incorporate personal experience into the discussions,
- Learning to build on interdisciplinary methods to strengthen one's own academic background,
- Familiarizing with transnational contexts such as Europe and the Americas,
- Discussing and analyzing concepts such as nationalism, globalization, sustainability, societal coherence,
- Equipping students with a broader outlook on shaping today's world,
- Strengthening the relationship between institutions,
- Enriching international and intercultural experience of all the participants (students and lecturers), Establishing interdisciplinary cooperation of teachers and students on a global level,
- Creating a highly supportive international network for students and faculty, new travel and cultural experiences, and further academic opportunities,
- Exploring new teaching methodologies and practices,

- Mastering transferable skills such as analysis, discussion, debate and academic writing,
- Sharing and gaining international expertise among all the participants.

3. Academic Program

GUSEGG 2021 will offer as an overall theme a broad discussion of the understanding of security, stability, and happiness. Defined quality assurance mechanisms and product and service safety measures are often defined as a guarantee for achieving individual happiness. Taking the place of political action and structural social change, the "imperative of happiness" (Illouz) has led to institutions and multinational corporations determining which individual decisions will lead to successful, meaningful, and healthy lives. When happiness is seen as independent of the material and political contexts we live in, then individual personal action is seen as a replacement and not as a demand for collective political agency. Climate change activists' calls for action are relegated to media coverage as social events inspiring individual measures, but not as an urgent call for institutional and governmental consequences.

As happiness has become a consumer good, the promise of an individual state of bliss has led to a decline of institutional ownership in terms of social, cultural, political, and economic measures, and shifted responsibilities from the collective to the individual. When the United 7 Nation published the "World Happiness Report" and the OECD launched the "Better Life Initiative," there was a shift from a demand for political action to the realm of the individual. Therefore, such issues are often met with reactions ranging from resignation to proactive ignorance, both on the individual and wider social, cultural, and national levels. Whereas critical reflection and civic engagement can lead to dramatic social change, placing the responsibility merely on the individual often leads to an eruption of aggression and violence against others. Understanding that the responsibility of creating an open and tolerant society lies both in the collective and individual, and requires political and social agency in order to ensure structures and institutions that support both the individual and the community. In order to develop strategies and methods to meet the immense challenges of our time, this summer school suggests engaging in academic contemplation and interdisciplinary exchange. It will do so by analyzing different expectations often expressed as demands and entitlement of ensured happiness as well as the demand for a tight net of security measures, such as the European Data Protection Law. Thus, discussing the relationship of the individual to social structures in terms of security, stability, and happiness leads to a contemplation of engagement as well as disengagement in terms of the relationship of the individual to social, political, and economic structure. Such investigations offer us the opportunity of developing disruptive intellectual approaches and ideas, as we can gain insights into the many forces that make us believe that the challenges we face are essential, natural, and inevitable. Therefore, analysis offers us not only an understanding of our own alliances on an individual, a regional, national, and global level, but also the possibility of moving from a passive position to active involvement in transformation processes in order to become agents of change by an authentic reformulation of our identities.

3.1. GUSEGG 2021: Poster Presentation & Workshop

The Workshop on Public Speaking and Presenting in Digital Spheres, will be held online by Dr. Stefan Rabitsch, where everyone interested in improving their presentation skills in online setting can come and join us. The workshop consists of two parts: Part 1 on June 11th, 2021, 5.00-6.30 pm (CET) and Part 2 on June 25th, 2021, 5.00-7.30 pm (CET).

3.2. Publication Opportunity

Students are encouraged to submit their work for consideration in a publication on the topic of the summer school that is published by the University of Graz Press in the Off Campus: Seggau School of Thought series. So far, six volumes have been published.

Feminist Bible Studies by Irmtraud Fischer

Understanding the Bible through the gender agenda: a gender fair reading of Old Testament texts on sexuality. Focusing on feminist exegesis, this workshop will show what it means to read the bible without any gender-bias as well as with the option for gender equality, thus, becoming aware of the impact of intersectionality. This will be thematically shown on exemplary texts on sexuality, through the creation stories which influenced gender conceptions throughout history up until now, but also through critical reading of narratives of sexual violence, as well as love poems like “Songs of Songs”.

➤ Tuesday, July 6, 09:00-11:45, (CEST)

Cultural Representations of Gender by Heike Hartung and Nicole Haring

The applied research lab “Cultural Representations of Gender” will explore techniques from literary and cultural studies on how to read gender in cultural representations, precisely in literature. It is the aim of the lab to engage with close reading techniques in combination with theoretical understandings from gender studies and feminist theory. The lab will consist of brief theoretical input and the application of analytical tools to show stories that problematize gender and other intersectional identity categories. Particularly, the investigation of the intersections of age and gender will be in the center of the workshop to juxtapose the individual with the collective. Significant concepts in gender studies and feminist theories, such as embodiment, power, sexuality, and resistance will be explored within the lab and the students will receive the necessary tools to read texts through an intersectional feminist lens that challenges limiting notions of gender and age (among other identity categories).

➤ Wednesday, July 7, 09:00-11:45, (CEST)

Qualitative Research by Barbara Ratzenböck

This applied research lab will delve into the discourse of qualitative research and methods in the humanities, but not only. In doing so, it also addresses epistemological foundations of the humanities (in comparison to those of the social sciences and the natural sciences) as well as challenges and benefits of interdisciplinary research. How we see and experience research objects strongly depends on our theoretical and methodological approaches which are based on our ideas of knowledge production and general purpose of research. This research lab invites participants to jointly explore different theoretical and methodological approaches to researching the practices of qualitative research, such as walking interviews for instance, from a perspective inspired by the humanities and social sciences. Participants will be encouraged to develop their own critical research questions in the fields of qualitative research.

Digital Storytelling Workshop with Andreas Schuch and Dagmar Wallenstorfer

Digital storytelling is a new method for learning and teaching in which storytelling is combined with digital technologies. A digital story is a short-form video in which someone narrates and shares a personal, cultural or other aspect of their life with others. This process encourages reflection processes about oneself and others as well as working with a specific topic on language, digital, intercultural and many other levels. The level of complexity concerning technology- and topic-related aspects can easily be adjusted according to the context in which a digital storytelling project takes place.

First experiments of combining multimedia elements with storytelling performances can be traced back to California during the 1980s. In 1994, the Digital Media Center was founded in San Francisco, which later became the Center for Digital Storytelling and, in 2015, simply Story Center. The center has played an instrumental role in developing and popularizing the practice of digital storytelling, which was initially limited to mostly therapeutic and expressive applications. Scholars and educators worldwide have since discovered and written about the numerous benefits of educational digital storytelling. However, digital storytelling has not yet reached the classrooms and university courses in German-speaking countries.

In this workshop, participants will get an overview of what digital storytelling is and learn about the basic steps involved in the process of creating and facilitating the creation of digital stories. A number of different methodological and technological tools will be introduced and course participants will be asked to produce a (prototype) digital story by themselves. For this purpose, all participants are kindly asked to bring a smartphone, tablet and/or laptop to the workshop, ideally with access to a few personal photos about one or more of the topics: “Stability, Security, and Happiness”.

Relational Approach and Mixed Methods Research: Constructing Gender Strategies in the Space of Social Inequalities by Agustin Derado

This workshop presents the rationale as well as the application of sociological relational approach in gender analysis. Sociological relational approach views individuals as fundamentally interdependent and embedded in structural relations of inequality - as Powell and Dépelteau (2013: 2) point out: “individuals (...) cannot be understood, even theoretically, apart from their relational contexts”. Studying gender relationally therefore entails analysing masculinity and femininity in the same frame of reference (Dworkin, 2015: 171) as well as locating individuals and households in the intersections of structural relations of inequality (McCall, 2005). Through this workshop we will clarify the logic of the relational approach to theory and methodology in gender research and in the study of social inequalities. It uses the example of mixed methods (utilising both qualitative and quantitative procedures) analysis applied to explore the relation of gender and class in Croatia, as part of the project GENMOD “Relational gender identities in Croatia: Modernization and development perspectives” (HRZZ-IP-2016-06-6010). The analysis relied on: a) the construction of the individual - male and female - gender strategies in the division of housework, b) developing a typology of household strategies linked to the division of housework, viewed in the context of the totality of household work practices, c) constructing the social space of inequalities in Croatia, and d) projecting the strategies into the space of social class inequalities. Multi-step qualitative analysis used to construct gender strategies is elaborated during the workshop. Its procedures entail three levels of coding and the construction of analytical profiles and tables. They are followed by the explanation of the procedures used to quantitatively construct the social space of inequalities: a utilisation of the Bourdieusian multiple correspondence analysis relying on the multidimensional model of class analysis for hybrid societies developed by Cvetičanin et al (2021). Lastly, the relational logic of understanding gender and class dimension of social inequalities is explained.

4.1.1. Afternoon Workshop

- Monday, July 5, and Tuesday, July 6, 13:00-14:45, (CEST)

Art Intervention by Franziska Pirstinger

Hands on GUSEGG Art Workshop...A painting game begins, where participants can immerse themselves in the world of colors and shapes and let be inspired. The colors dance across the canvas. All art material will be provided ahead of time by Team GUSEGG for every participant on site.

SEMINAR 1

Happiness in Contested Spaces: History, Politics, and Difference in the Americas

Lecturer: Don E. Walicek, University of Puerto Rico, Río Piedras Campus

(don.walicek@upr.edu)

July 5 – July 9 / (15:00 – 17:45, CEST)

Examining happiness in the broad scope of the complex social history of the Americas, this course consists of three main parts. Part one examines central aspects of the human experience that can be used to better understand and critically assess statements about happiness and their manifestations across different cultures, moral geographies, and time periods. Exploring the nexus between happiness and memory, the second part focuses on the consequences of contact between the Indigenous people of the Americas and Europeans involved in the colonization of the region, debates about the rights and futures of non-European (Indigenous, African, and Asian) peoples, and contemporary scholarship that theorizes genocide, coloniality, and other episodes of violence. Part two also considers how enslaved African and Afro-Caribbean peoples and other marginalized groups created languages, cultural traditions, and world-views that allowed them to foster happiness and hope within their individual lives and in society at large. Finally, the seminar's third part will deconstruct the well-known phrase "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" from the U.S. Declaration of Independence and consider its impact for different societies and social groups. Students enrolled in this seminar will have the opportunity to plan and develop a short research project that involves the analysis of colonial-era archival materials.

SEMINAR 2

Media, Generations, and Gender

Lecturers: Mirko Petrić, University of Zadar, Croatia (mpetric@unizd.hr) and Barbara Ratzenböck, University of Graz, Austria (barbara.ratzenboeck@uni-graz.at)

July 5 – July 9 / (15:00 – 17:45, CEST)

This seminar addresses fundamentals of media studies and sociology of media, focusing on selected issues of relevance. First, we will sharpen our analytical tools by developing a concise understanding of terms which we use frequently – both in everyday life and in academic settings – but often vaguely, such as ‘media’ and ‘culture.’ In doing so, we will place media developments into a wider context of social transformations. In the subsequent session, we will investigate a first key issue in relation to media – populism and its proliferation in the “age of distrust”. In addition to the negative connotations of terms like “mediocracy” and “digital populism”, space will be devoted to the discussion of “digital activism” and other forms of civic and intellectual participation enabled by digital media. Session 3 will discuss social media as well as digital inequalities as another crucial issue related to the study of media. Even if many things increasingly happen online – working, learning, shopping, getting news – not all people have equal access to digital infrastructure and acquisition of skills. How and why people use different kinds of media depends on various factors, such as socio-economic resources, technological infrastructure, location, and social norms related to gender and generational position, but also individual interests. Building on this critical discussion, session 4 will then showcase an empirical study which examined how women aged 60 plus engage with ‘old’ and ‘new’ ICTs and how this relates to lifetimes of experience with technology change.

SEMINAR 3

Economics and Inequalities: GDP and Happiness

Lecturer: Luis San Vicente Portes, Montclair State University, USA

(portesl@montclair.edu)

July 5 – July 9 / (15:00 – 17:45, CEST)

Sounds like a riddle. We don't see it but we are in it. We don't see it but we are all part of it. More? This is what it is not, society. Here is the give-away: to account for it, it has to be measured. Oh, but is it there where the trouble begins? Measures are based on scales, and if there are scales then one can compare. One can compare its evolution over time and its appearance at a point in time. Ok ok, it is ... the economy! See? It was better left un-named, because now we are forced to think harder. Start with our fixture to it and the effect it has on us. Is growth bad? Wait, whose growth? And what about stability? Is there a trade-off between growth and stability? Security would be nice, but what makes us happy? Could it be unmeasured things (e.g. caring for others)? One would be hardpressed to find a nation whose stated objective is to maximize growth, though at least there are three nations who seek to maximize happiness –and they are led by women. Scotland, New-Zealand, and Iceland do have such goal, and so does Bhutan, the first nation to promote Gross National Happiness since 1972. But then again, is happiness and absolute or a relative notion? Does it affect my perception of well-being that others are better-off or worse-off than me? If so inequality matters. This seminar will provide a foundation and perspective from which to tackle all these questions and other pressing ones such as why are there economic disparities among countries, why some economies are more stable than others (its ramifications to security, where security extends to the threat from climate change), and if happiness is the ultimate goal, how to measure it, and how to achieve it?

SEMINAR 4

Narratives of Jewish Migration

Lecturers: Cheryl Lester (chlester@ku.edu) and Philip Barnard (philipb@ku.edu),

University of Kansas, USA

July 5 – July 9 / (15:00 – 17:45, CEST)

This seminar explores aspects of the evolution of narratives of Jewish migration, from the narrative of Exodus in the Hebrew Bible to its construction as the foundation of Jewish peoplehood to the Haggadah and its transformations in narratives of migration in literary and historical texts to the 20th century and beyond. Thus “narrative” (along with related concepts of tradition and cultural transmission) and “migration” become basic keywords and concepts to be viewed analytically, historicized, and periodized. We consider how “narrative,” “migration,” and Jewish “diasporic” identity are interrelated and figure in contemporary debates about Jewish peoplehood. Our texts address the dynamic between religious and secular narratives of migration, on one hand, and the precarious stability and security of Jewish identities. The seminar’s readings, both sacred (Exodus, the Passover Haggadah), literary (Joseph Roth, Philip Roth), and filmic (“My Polish Honeymoon”) enable us to examine the construction and transformation(s) of Jewish narratives of migration and Jewish identity and trace out the vicissitudes of stability, security, and happiness in sacred and secular texts.

Aging Masculinities: In Pursuit of Happiness

Lecturers:

Jose Maria Armengol, University Castilla de la Mancha, Spain;

Murray Forman, Northeastern University, USA (m.forman@northeastern.edu)

Heike Hartung, University of Potsdam, Germany (hhartung@uni-potsdam.de)

Hernando Gomez, Researcher in the MASCAGE Project, (hergo22@hotmail.com)

Roberta Maierhofer, University of Graz, Austria (roberta-maierhofer@uni-graz.at)

July 5 – July 9 / (15:00 – 17:45, CEST)

The seminar will introduce the emergent field of Critical Age Studies with a particular emphasis on gender and aging among men. Intersectional theoretical approaches will be discussed as a means of analysis across social variables (focused on, but not limited to, aging masculinities) as well as exploring the significance of the plural construct, “aging masculinities.” Among the issues under analysis are: the depiction of older men in relation to anti-aging discourse and anti-aging advertising; aspects of style and identity among aging men; and case studies engaging masculinity, age, and celebrity in the realms of popular music and hip-hop culture. Students will acquire a clearer understanding about how masculine aging is manifested as a cultural construct while examining the multiple meanings and values associated with men beyond middle age.

SEMINAR 6

Sociology of Emotions: Happiness and Nostalgia

Lecturer: Katharina Scherke, University of Graz, Austria

(katharina.scherke@uni-graz.at)

July 5 – July 9 / 15:00 – 17:45 (CEST)

Nostalgia has been defined quite differently throughout history. Once it was seen as a mental disorder, now its positive impact on human well-being is discussed vividly. Different disciplines have dealt with nostalgia so far and very often cultural critiques framed nostalgia as leading to conservatism and restorative attitudes. The seminar is going to deal with nostalgia from a sociology-of-emotions point of view. It thus takes up a specific aspect out of the huge amount of work being done by different disciplines on emotions and passion so far. Emotions have been (re-)discovered by sociology in the last 40 years. Within sociology of emotions two main lines of thought can be distinguished: one line making the social development of emotions a topic of discussion, and another one investigating the social effects of emotions. In regard to nostalgia both lines of thought are applicable. Having a look into the social circumstances which form the background for nostalgia and also looking at the consequences of (widespread) nostalgic remembrances in a society for this society can be a task for sociology. After a short introduction to sociology of emotions in general we will deal with different aspects of nostalgia (e.g. personal and historical nostalgia, restorative and reflective nostalgia, retotrends in fashion and design). Furthermore, the usage of nostalgia in populist rhetoric, which seemingly promises an increase of happiness and wellbeing by a return to the past will be analyzed in regard to the underlying different other emotional messages (e.g. of hatred and anger).

Nineteenth-Century African American Migration to Haiti and the Semiotics of Collective Memory

Don E. Walicek and Cheryl Lester

What is the significance of trauma, dehumanization, and violence for collective memory? How should narratives about such experiences be constructed? For whom should they be written? Consisting of three main parts, this paper turns to these and related questions to show how collective memories of slavery, revolution, and migration are created, recreated, and contested through entextualization, erasure, and other semiotic processes. As will be explained, approximately 6,000 African Americans left for Haiti prior to the abolition of slavery in the U.S. They fled realities of slavery, dispossession, racial violence, and limited economic opportunities. The paper's first part is an account of the circumstances that led to this migration. The second part will focus on social dynamics in the town of Samaná, a settlement where the descendants of 300 original migrants maintained "American" language and culture for more than 150 years (Lissewski 1991, Walicek 2007, Valdez 2010). Probing discourses about slavery, belonging, and freedom, part three asks how findings from this research might support the cultivation of progressive solidarity and a more equitable future.

Back to the Bet Midrash: Judaism for the Sake of Justice and Equity

The principles, values, and customs of Judaism are neither timeless nor universal but are transformed over time through struggle and contestation. Especially at times of disruptive change, the concept of Jewish peoplehood, the core concept of Jewish solidarity, demands innovation. Responding to the present moment as a "crash," Rosh Yeshiva Rabbi Benay Lappe founded SVARA (a Talmudic term translated as "moral intuition"), a yeshiva that teaches Talmud as an innovation born in the context of trauma. Viewed through the lens of queer experiences, SVARA advocates for the study of Talmud as the ground of a radical and liberatory expression of Judaism. Just as the rabbis of the Talmud, following the destruction of the Temple and the Babylonian exile, replaced ritual sacrifice with prayer, SVARA replaces prayer with the learning environment of the bet midrash as the core spiritual practice of Judaism. SVARA views Talmud as a "roadmap for making radical change rooted in tradition," a way to move and equip people with svara (moral intuition) and gemara (learning) so that they may bring about a more just and equitable world.

Gender and Generations: Future in the Past

Mirko Petrić

“To some generations much is given. Of other generations much is expected”, Franklin D. Roosevelt stated in his 1936 presidential renomination speech. Several generations have passed since then, and the present-day ones seem to have a much less clear vision of what they are “given” or what is “expected” of them. This also applies to the complex field of gender relations, perhaps even more so because the modern, social science concept of “generation” was derived from the preceding notion of “familial generation”.

This lecture addresses two key questions: (1) How have modernization processes in the 20th and 21st centuries changed our understanding of the notion of “generations”? (2) How does generational membership influence gender-related attitudes, values, and practices? After presenting sociological snapshots of answers to these questions in the past, the lecture continues with a more detailed discussion of how generational gender attitudes, values and practices change over time. The examples are from two regionally comparable countries with different political trajectories in the recent past (Austria and Croatia). The emphasis is on the long-term duration and non-linear character of modernization changes.

Economics and Inequalities: Stability? Security? Happiness?

Luis San Vicente Portes

It is likely that the answer each of us has to the meaning of these words may be different, though we all share their importance. On what does the answer depend? Is it somewhere enshrined? It may well be that Stability and Security are necessary conditions for Happiness. Even if so, each of these life experiences may involve a private and public element. The interplay of external and internal domains? A stable family environment alongside social harmony; safety in our interpersonal relationships and a secure environment in which to exercise our agency in an institutional setting that fosters self-determination. So, what about Happiness? Are the contours of Happiness sharper? Is Happiness absolute (a personal experience) or is it relative (affected by other's standing)?

Difficult, right? Or maybe not. Stability and Security may be slow-moving and may be the product of possibly centuries of traditions and history (or until a pandemic comes to test them). But Happiness could be easier to track in shorter time scales. While all of these are abstract and subjective, this Plenary Lecture will provide a platform to think of them through the lens of economics. While touching on the three keywords, it may be that happiness unravels their connection and paint with color shades of their ethereal nature.

And this is where we begin: inequality. We know what it is, it triggers strong emotions, and we underestimate it in the simplest of comparisons. Inequality is sort of the anti-Happiness. The frequent measurement of living conditions through material well-being informs of “progress” at the national level with insights at our relative standing in a myriad of dimensions that allow for income, wealth, consumption, health, and gender comparisons.

But is this shadow on happiness inevitable? Do we have to live with it? Where does it come from?

Statistics from GUSEGG 2021

This year, the Graz International Summer School Seggau welcomes 89 students from all around the world to join us for the one-week program taking place in Schloss Seggau, located in the southern part of Styria in Austria. Given the COVID 19 circumstances, this year it is possible to only welcome participants from Austria to join us on site at Schloss Seggau, while the international participants join us virtually from all corners of the world. Statistically, GUSEGG 2021 has 89 participants, where 24 of them come from the universities in Graz, who join us on site for the one-week program, and 65 international participants join us virtually from their respective home countries. The three countries with the most GUSEGG 2021 participants are: Austria with 15 participants; the USA with 14 participants, and then Croatia and Hungary with 9 participants each. There is a diverse number of countries that the participants of this year's summer school come from; all the way from the Americas, to Europe, and Asia, with a very widespread and international outreach.

5. GUSEGG Academy 2021
