Sažetak: This talk, on South Slavic (as well as Russian and Romanian) shows how phonology sometimes interferes with syntax. If two moved items sound alike, they are kept apart (violating syntactic requirements).